Navy updates SAPR Instruction

By Chief of Naval Personnel Public Affairs

Navy's 21st Century Sailor Office announced Aug. 17 the release of an updated instruction governing the SAPR program.

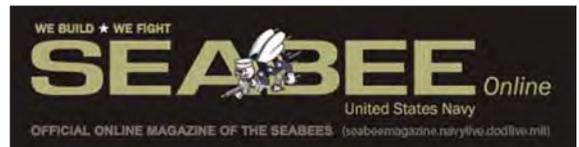

OPNAVINST 1752.1C is the first update since 2006 and includes comprehensive changes that organize policy into more coherent format, provides updated requirements, and emphasizes the importance of the prevention of sexual assault.

The information aligns with the National Defense Authorization Acts for Fiscal Years 2007 through 2014 requirements and Department of Defense policy and mandates. Additionally, the revision contains updates relating to safety assessment requirements, SAPR training requirements, retaliation initiatives, Reserve Component services, and availability of the Victims' Legal Counsel program for adult sexual assault victims within Navy.

The document incorporates many of the changes that have already been implemented through the use of NAVADMINs, and as a result cancels ten naval messages dating back to 2009.

It can be read in its entirety at: <http://www.navy.mil/docs/OPNAVINST-1752-1C.pdf>.

The scheduled water flow testing and flushing will continue through Aug. 21, between 7 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. The flushing will affect all facilities and housing units south of Marvin Shields Boulevard. The flushing may cause some sediment in the lines to break free and cause water to look discolored. If this occurs, simply run the faucets until the water clears. Hurricane season is now in full swing

By BUCN Samantha Opeyoke
NCBC Public Affairs

Peak hurricane season has arrived and will continue for the next few months before officially coming to an end Nov. 30. For those who have not yet finalized emergency plans, it is time to stop procrastinating.

Listed below are tips, reminders and helpful links designed to help families prepare for emergencies.

- ~ Check your disaster supplies and build an emergency kit with basic items your household may need for a minimum of 72 hours.

- ~ Create an emergency contact/communication card for every member of your family.

- ~ Keep your car filled with fuel and ensure proper vehicle maintenance is done.

- ~ Create a hurricane evacuation plan with members of your household. Planning and practicing your evacuation plan minimizes confusion and fear during the event.

- ~ Find out about your community's hurricane response plan. Plan routes to local shelters, register family members with special medical needs and make plans for your pets to be cared for.

- ~ Standard homeowners insurance doesn't cover flooding. It's important to have protection from the floods associated with hurricanes, tropical storms, heavy rains and other conditions that impact the U.S. Once a storm is in the area, insurance companies usually stop writing policies, so it is important to take care of your property before there is a possible disaster. For more information on flood insurance, please visit the National Flood Insurance Program Web site at www.FloodSmart.gov.

- ~ Know your community surroundings and evacuation routes. Learn if there are any levees or dams in your area that could pose a risk during a storm.

This week in Seabee History

Aug. 22

1954: On May 7, 1954, the French Colonial Forces were defeated at Dien Bien Phu in French Indo-China. In accordance with the following Geneva Convention of July 21, 1954, Indo-China became a number of sovereign states: Laos, Cambodia, and Vietnam. In turn, Vietnam was divided into two roughly at the 17th parallel, thus creating North and South Vietnam. The truce agreement provided that the people of the two Vietnams should be permitted to reside in the country of their choice, and the United States was asked to provide transportation for the anticipated mass migration from Communist North Vietnam to free South Vietnam. The United States Navy was given the task of providing transportation for the migrants and Seabees of Amphibious Construction Battalion One were assigned the task of installing and operating pontoon bridges where necessary and building campsites for the refugees. However, when the amphibious Seabees arrived in Haiphong Aug. 22, it was discovered that the truce agreement prohibited the landing of foreign military units in Vietnam. Thus, the Seabees were stopped from operating until all military insignia were removed from their uniforms and equipment and some of them donned nondescript clothing. Then they returned to their tasks. The Seabees not only contributed to the movement of several hundred thousand Vietnamese and their possessions, but the camps they built contributed to the comfort of the refugees. While assisting the Vietnamese in their mass migration, the Seabees also helped the French troops evacuate the country and in the south built a recreation center for the personnel of the U.S. Seventh Fleet engaged in the operation. For their efforts, the men of ACB 1 who participated in Operations "Passage to Freedom" were commended by the Task Force Commander.

Kadena Airmen, Seabees combine for joint training in Okinawa

By Staff Sgt. Maeson L. Elleman
18th Wing Public Affairs

Airmen from the 18th Civil Engineer Squadron worked side-by-side with Navy Seabees from Naval Mobile Construction Battalion (NMCB) 5 during joint airfield damage repair (ADR) training, Kadena Air Base, Okinawa, Japan, July 23.

The ADR training gave the two forces the opportunity to gain familiarity with one another while practicing skills they could potentially implement in a wartime environment.

"It's always good training," said Construction Electrician 1st Class Dean Cuenca, NMCB 5 assistant NCO in charge of the training. "It's great to carry out the mission that the Navy has for the Seabees and ... experience what's outside of the United States. Joint exercises are always great being that we might do something different than our brothers and sisters might do. It's a great opportunity."

According to Cuenca, the training isn't a frequent occurrence for the Seabees. However, he said it's an experience that shouldn't be taken lightly.

"This is a good opportunity to integrate with our brothers and sisters in the Air Force to see how their TTPs (tactics, techniques and procedures) and their scheme of Airman 1st Class Christian Rosa, 18th Civil Engineering Squadron, shows Construction Electrician Constructionman Jasmine Hallaxrouanet, of Naval Mobile Construction Battalion (NMCB) 5, how to reel in emergency airfield lighting system cables during airfield damage repair, joint contingency training on Kadena Air Base, Okinawa, Japan. maneuvers go," he said. "As far as airfield damage repair goes, a lot of services have an ADR organization, and it's just our way to view how the Air Force conducts or executes their mission. We have our way; we come here with an open mind to see how the Air Force does it and maybe implement that into our team training."

During the scenario, the engineers practiced all the steps required to rapidly repair a damaged runway to ensure aircraft can continue to take off. This ensures that even if Kadena was attacked it could do what it does best: provide unmatched combat power to the Indo-Asia-Pacific region. To accomplish that, the Airmen and Sailors took to the controls of heavy machinery in order to fill a previously dug 50-foot crater with surrounding debris.

Next, dump trucks supplied the workers with more filler, where the machinery was used to shape and level the hole to certain measurements before also being pressed into place by a roller and covered with a fiberglass sheet.

Though many of the procedures are similar for both services, the Air Force has a more extensive set of training that allows integration of airfield lighting systems into the repair.

According to Cuenca, the different services go to the same technical training school to learn ADR procedures. However, once the Sailors graduate, the Airmen remain behind to continue training on the airfield lighting systems.

"Right now, for a lot of the personnel going to learn this skill, it's beneficial to them because if we do our ADR mission – if it's something they encounter later on in the future – it's something they're already exposed to by doing this training with the Air Force," Cuenca said.

It's this partnership with another branch of the U.S. military that's a vital component to future joint operations.

"It's really all about consistency and chemistry," said 2nd Lt. David Brown-Dawson, 18th Civil Engineer Squadron operations engineer. "If we were to be attacked, that very well could be what happens in real-world situations. Being able to have

Sliding through slippery summer

Back in June, I thought summer was an all you can eat buffet of leisure splayed out before me like a picnic at the park.

My mind raced with all that could be done in three whole months.

"I'll spend afternoons lounging at the beach to get that cool surfer look with a peely nose and streaks of blonde in my hair. I'll strip, sand, stain and refinish that old dresser my husband has been threatening to drop off at Goodwill. I'll plant hydrangeas, and lovely cascading window boxes, while wearing a sundress and straw hat. I'll take a trip to see my mother, and we'll sit on the porch in rocking chairs telling stories and drinking coffee. I'll host backyard barbecues with tangy grilled meats, snappy local corn, and fresh peach pies for all our friends." I thought.

Here it is mid-August, and all I have to show for myself is a few new age spots and a couple of scraggly tomato plants. As fast as a wet kid on a Slip 'N Slide, but not nearly as much fun, summer simply slid right by me.

What the heck happened?

Summer has been a blur. We spent so many hours packed into our minivan touring colleges and visiting family, that our vehicle now has the permanent aroma of dirty socks and submarine sandwiches. When home, my days were spent shuttling my kids to jobs and get-togethers with their friends; picking up after them; and nagging them to help walk the dog, empty the dishwasher, take SAT practice tests, write college essays and fold laundry.

Apparently, summer-time has ceased to be the extended break from reality that it was when I was a kid.

Our parents never had to say it, but we were expected to get up each summer day and, basically, beat it. Go somewhere, do something, get out of the house. I don't care how hot it is, that's what garden hoses, creeks, and community pools are for. And don't ask for money, other than maybe a bit of pocket change for a snow cone.

On boring summer days when I was a kid, I'd get on my bike and ride several miles on rural roads to a local airplane hangar so I could buy a grape soda from the vending machine. I'd arrive home three hours later with a purple mustache and no one gave it a second thought. When it got really hot, my friends and I would stick our feet in the "creek" down in the ravine near our houses, and belt songs like Captain and Tennessee's "Love Will Keep Us Together" into the massive drainage tunnel that ran under the highway. Our parents were happy we were occupying ourselves, and expressed no concern that we might get hepatitis or parasites from the suspicious water. Some lucky days, my mom would drop me off at the town pool, where I was expected to spend the entire day making friends, feeding myself with a buck fifty in change, and avoiding spinal injuries on the high dive. When it rained, my friends and I were banished to basement rumpus rooms, where we would get into arguments while playing hours of Monopoly, Sorry and Clue.

Back then, it was kids' solemn obligation to entertain themselves with minimal parental assistance. Now that I'm a parent, I must say ... those were the good old days.

But I'm not going to let summer slip on by. Before we find ourselves knee deep in school physical forms and summer reading reports, I'm determined to slow down and take a good old-fashioned break.

Next week, my family of five is headed to Maine. We're renting a rustic cabin on Great Pond -- a remote military recreation facility about an hour north of Bangor -- with no Internet access, no phone service, and no cable television. Just a clear lake, canoes, picnic tables, fire pits, Adirondack chairs, and a lodge with ping pong and stacks of board games.

It may not be a drainage tunnel under the highway and I'm not sure if they'll have grape sodas, but I'm pretty sure we'll entertain ourselves just fine.

From OKINAWA page 6 that chemistry we already built through these training sessions -- that just helps us even more to accomplish the mission more effectively if that comes to pass."

Brown-Dawson said despite the challenges of working with another service, he hopes the two services can work together again in the near future.

"There are always differences," he said, "but I think we're all coming together, and I think that's been the biggest piece -- coming together for the sake of the mission. I think it's very important for us to train. This is a joint environment, this is a joint community and we have joint missions. To be able to train together is important to the success of our missions."
